Duration: 15 mins

Nestled in the Saint-Vaast-la-Hougue harbour, the island of Tatihou has 300 years of turbulent history, where military, trade, scientific and educational events have been interwoven. Vauban Fort, built after the Battle of La Hougue, a quarantine station converted into a laboratory in the Natural History Museum and a Maritime Museum presenting the adventures along the English Channel coasts are all opportunities to understand history and the regional heritage.

In four hectares, a large maritime park, a discovery garden and a botanical garden show off the flora of the sea shore, from both here and elsewhere. Saint-Vaast-La-Hougue harbour is a major ornithological site. Here, all though the year, can be found over 100 nesting, migratory or wintering species.

The site's originality, and its natural and historic riches, provides a unique opportunity to reach a wide range of activities.

Access to the island is by amphibious boat. At high tide, you sail on the water, and at low tide, you will drive between the rocks and the oyster beds.

On the island, the Maritime Museum, the Vauban Tower, the Boat Hall and the Maritime Gardens are open to visitors.

The Maritime Museum

Exhibition "Fleets and Fracas, the Shipwreck of La Houque, 1692"

Off the coast of Barfleur, on 29 May 1692, the ships of Louis XIV faced up to the Anglo-Dutch naval powers. A number of vessels were set on fire. Three centuries later, the Maritime Museum presents an exhibition with over 200 objects, touching a wide range of topics, such as shipbuilding, 17th century navigation and life on board, sea battle strategies, and also the stories of the objects that discovered centuries later. Hands-on displays, animated films and a children's visit are an opportunity to immerse yourself in the maritime history of the 17th century.

The Maritime Gardens: Beneath the walls of the quarantine station, the four-hectare gardens show off the flora of the sea shore, both from here and elsewhere. A place to take a stroll and find inspiration, and also an area introducing visitors to botany.

The Vauban Tower: two years after the Battle of La Hougue, Vauban built a fort at the edge of the island. From the top of the tower, there is a vast panorama over the island and the east coast of Cotentin.
